

Legal & Safety Overview

Live copy of app.whatsinmyfridge.co.uk

Prepared 24 June 2026 · a plain-English summary for legal review. Not legal advice.

Purpose of this document

This summarises the legal and safety measures built into What's in my Fridge (web app + marketing site) so they can be reviewed by a solicitor. The full, binding texts are the live Terms of Service and Privacy Policy (supplied separately as PDFs).

What the product is

A phone-first PWA that tracks a user's fridge/freezer/pantry, recognises groceries from photos and receipts using third-party AI (Anthropic), suggests meals and step-by-step recipes, and builds a shopping list. Operated by John Bell, sole trader, trading as What's in my Fridge. UK-based; governing law England & Wales.

Food safety measures

- Terms include a prominent food-safety notice: in-app expiry/use-by figures are estimates, users must follow actual packaging dates, and must not rely on the app to decide if food is safe.
- A dedicated 'Recipes, cooking & allergens' Terms section: recipes and cooking guidance are AI suggestions only; the user is responsible for cooking food safely; links to Food Standards Agency guidance.
- The AI is instructed to put safe cooking endpoints into recipe steps (poultry/pork/mince piping hot ~75°C, fish until it flakes, rice reheated only once), and never to declare food safe past its use-by date.
- A persistent on-screen safety note appears under every recipe and meal suggestion: 'AI can make mistakes — cook food to safe temperatures, follow use-by dates, and check labels for allergens yourself.'

Allergen measures

- Allergy/avoid preferences require an explicit in-app acknowledgement before use, stating the AI can be wrong and the user must read every label.
- The AI is instructed never to call a dish allergen-free or safe for an allergy or medical condition, and always to tell users to check labels themselves.
- Terms state the app must not be used as a substitute for checking labels where anyone has a food allergy or intolerance.

Medical / health claims

- The app does not give clinical or personalised medical advice; the AI redirects medical, allergy and condition questions to a GP, pharmacist or registered dietitian.
- Marketing avoids regulated health claims; dietary filters are positioned as convenience, not medical guidance.

Subscriptions & consumer terms

- Plus is £3.99/month via Stripe, auto-renewing, cancellable any time from the account (renewal stops at end of the paid period).
- A 14-day free Plus trial; reverts to the free plan after.
- Digital-service commencement and refund position stated; price/limit changes only with reasonable notice and never affect a period already paid for.

Service discontinuation (wind-down)

- Terms grant the right to discontinue the app with reasonable notice (in-app + email), stopping new sign-ups and further charges.
- Any paid Plus period is honoured to its end; if closure happens mid-period, the unused portion is refunded pro-rata.
- Users get a data-export window before closure; data is then deleted per the Privacy Policy.

Data protection (UK GDPR)

- Privacy Policy lists all data collected, purposes, lawful bases (including legitimate interests for the anti-abuse device fingerprint and sign-up IP), processors (Anthropic, Supabase, Vercel, Stripe, Resend), retention, and user rights (access, export, delete).
- In-app data export and account deletion are provided. Not directed at under-13s.

Open items for the reviewer

- Confirm the liability limitations and disclaimers are enforceable and not 'unfair terms' under the Consumer Rights Act 2015.
- Confirm allergen and food-safety wording is sufficient for the level of risk.
- Confirm subscription terms meet cooling-off / cancellation requirements (Consumer Contracts Regulations and incoming subscription rules).
- Review marketing copy for any regulated nutrition/health claims (ASA/CAP).
- Advise on product/public liability and professional indemnity insurance.
- Confirm the international position if users sign up from outside the UK.
